No matter what you're attached to, we all hate device lagging out of revenge. Players hate it because it interrupts their fights and attacks, developers hate it because it distracts them from their thoughts, and everyone else hates it because you might need to reboot your device to get it working again. Android devices regularly fall victim to unexplained lags, although some might argue that their devices' lags are most likely user-inflicted. Arguments aside, why do Android devices stop working at their best after a certain period of use? We don't settle for "hey, it happens". In fact, we have listed here 5 causes of Android lagging and how to deal with them with apps. Top 10 Android Productivity Tips Important! As always, make sure you take a full Android backup before doing anything. 1. Identify resource intensive applications. Possible reason. Running resource-intensive applications in the background can significantly reduce battery life. Live widgets, background sync, and push notifications can cause your device to wake up suddenly from sleep or sometimes cause a noticeable delay in launching apps. Sometimes you're not even sure what's causing the delay. Solution. To find out which app is causing the problem, try using Wakelock Detector. After downloading the application, charge the device to 90% battery, unplug the charging cable and leave the device for about 1-2 hours to start collecting wake statistics. After opening Wakelock Detector, you will be able to see the statistics of all running applications. The app at the top of the list is the app with the most battery consumption. For more information, go to Advanced > Settings > select Advanced Mode to view system processes. When you find a problem, decide if you really need the app or not. If the latter, go to step 2. 2. Applications go to sleep Possible cause: if you have a lot of applications that slow down Android. You have the option to disable or freeze the app. In some cases, some apps offer the ability to "disable" certain features, but disabling them will prevent the app from working properly. If the app freezes, it's almost as close to uninstalling it. And that doesn't work for apps that we want to use from time to time. There is a third possibility. Solution: You can put the app to sleep. Hibernate apps wake up and run normally when you tap the app to launch it. To do this, try Greenify. After installing the app, press the "+" button and you will be redirected to the app analyzer page. The apps listed in the "Runs in the background" and "May slow down your device if" sections are apps that consume your battery and cause lag on your device. Tap on the apps to highlight the ones you want to hibernate and select Accept in the top right corner to hibernate them. 3. Keep storage clean. Likely Cause: Some devices have low memory problem and most of them stop working when they reach around 80% of device capacity. If your gear shows signs of lag, it might be time for a spring cleaning. In addition, deleted files can still be recovered as long as you create empty files to overwrite them on your device. Solution: Forever Gone is an app that helps you clean up your storage and allows you to fill the remaining storage with empty files by deleting them during the cleaning session. Before you begin, check the boxes next to "Free up space when charging is complete" and "Pause charging when phone is locked." Press the "Fill in the space" button to start the process. Warning: Please read the description of Forever Gone and understand that this app may not work properly on some devices since some devices cannot handle the required tasks. 4. Preserve system feedback Likely cause: The memory controller is part of iEquipment that receives feedback on the availability of SKUs. The information is then transferred to Android. This usually happens immediately, but sometimes there can be a "hang" where there is no feedback from the memory controller. This will slow down the system until it gets a response to send to the system. Solution #1: To fix this lag, first check the device I/O activity using Cool Tool - System Statistics to see if it is low or high. Solution #2: If it's overloaded, run LagFix, an app that scans your device's memory, collects information and sends it to Android, effectively bypassing the waiting process. Warning: If you cannot install LagFix from the Play Store, your device is not compatible because it does not support the TRIM command. When starting the installation, you can lock the device. 5. Optimized for Gaming Possible Cause: If you play a lot on your Android device and experience lags during your gaming sessions, it is due to services and apps running in the background and consuming device memory. There are two ways to optimize your storage device for the best gaming session. Can you use a more feature rich RAM optimization app? Try the AutoKiller memory optimizer. Solution #1: Game Booster helps you stop unnecessary background services and apps to free up some free RAM for gaming performance instead. After installing Game Booster, click the "+" button, select the game you want to boost and click on it. You'll return to the home page and see your game listed. Click it again and it will automatically free up device memory and launch the game. Solution #2: AutoKiller Memory Optimizer comes with 7 presets containing different minfree values for hidden applications, content providers and blank applications. The higher the value, the more applications AutoKiller kills automatically. Without rooting, you just need to emulate these settings, which will make this app perform better. Devices. Try the presets you think are best for your device, or add values manually (be careful with the values you add if you don't want apps to close randomly). Advanced users may want to enable 10/10 kernel optimization on the settings page to further optimize their device. Try the steps on this page if your phone is: Very slow.
